Whom do Health Centers Serve?

For more than 45 years, health centers have provided comprehensive, culturally competent, quality primary health care services to medically underserved communities and vulnerable populations, across Pennsylvania and the country. Primary care services include prevention services, like screening and immunizations, as well as the treatment of acute and chronic medical conditions. There are various types of health centers, but all share the goal of increasing access to quality primary health care for underserved populations, whether rural or urban.

Types of Health Centers

Community Health Centers (denoted in this directory by the symbol ) are all non-profit healthcare providers that provide comprehensive primary health care. They comprise the largest national network of primary care providers, serving more than 21.7 million people in more than 9,000 locations. In Pennsylvania, there are more than 250 FQHC sites in rural and urban areas of Pennsylvania, with locations in 49 of the commonwealth's 67 counties. There are four primary characteristics that distinguish community health centers  from other primary care providers:

Fees based on ability to pay (FQHCs must offer a sliding fee scale)

Quality health care for all (FQHCs are open to all and they must meet federal reporting, performance and accountability requirements)

Highly competent health professional team (FQHCs offer other services to help patients stay well, such as case management, pharmacy, lab testing, social services and translation)

Community control to ensure they are responsive to their patient population (at least 51% of people serving on the governing board of an FQHC must be patients served by the FQHC)

In addition to primary medical care across the lifespan, FQHCs often offer dental and behavioral health services. They also offer access to discount medications either on site or through arrangement with a pharmacy.

Rural health clinics (RHCs) must be located in non-urbanized areas of medical underservice. There are currently 59 RHC sites in rural areas of Pennsylvania. The major ways RHCs differ from an  are:

- They are limited to non-urban locations
- They must employ a non-physician provider (physician assistant or nurse practitioner) at least 50% of the hours they are open
- They can be for-profit or not-for-profit
- They can be freestanding or connected organizationally to another provider, such as a hospital
- Their services are generally limited to medical (i.e. most do not offer dental or behavioral health care)
- They have no board of director requirements
- They may limit their services to specific age groups and do not have to provide services across the lifespan

RHCs serve an important role in many rural underserved areas of Pennsylvania that may not have the resources or population to support the more comprehensive , but are no less in need of access to quality primary health care services.

Pennsylvania Association of Community Health Centers

As the state primary care association, the Pennsylvania Association of Community Health Centers (PACHC) represents and supports the largest network of primary health care providers in the Commonwealth. Our network of health centers includes Community Health Centers (FQHCs), FQHC Look-Alikes, Rural Health Clinics and other like-mission providers serving more than 600,000 people at more than 200 sites in underserved areas throughout the Commonwealth.

Established in 1981 as a private non-profit organization, PACHC was formed by and for community health center programs. PACHC programs and services are designed to strengthen, promote and grow health centers in today's complex and constantly changing health care environment as well as support Community Health Centers (FQHCs) in their mission to provide quality primary care to all, regardless of ability to pay.
